Writers Read

It's finally your night!

All year long in our Writers Nights we've been talking about writing. Now's your chance to share some of what you've written. This is for enjoyment and sharing - not a critique group. Bring your poems, chapters or segments to share at our open mic night. Plan on a 3- to 5-minute reading. If we have time, we'll do another round. Don't be shy!

Writers Night • Tuesday, Dec. 3, 5:30-7:30 FREE at The Art Center

The WCWF board is working on our 2020 Writers Night presentations. If you have ideas for a workshop, or if you feel a need to hear about a certain topic on writing, email your suggestions to: wwritersforum@gmail.com

WHAT YOU MISSED!

THE ART OF THE SLAM

Hosted by past winner Corey Spurlock, the slam poetry event on Nov. 7 brought over 50 into the Art Center for an evening of exciting and meaningful performances. Once again ages ranged wide and topics were both familiar and surprising. And as always, a treat!

Writing and Publishing Non-Fiction an evening with published experts

Rebecca Mullen Memoir and coaching

*Linda Armstrong
Non-fiction education*

*Virginia Jensen
Craft & jewelry instruction*

This trio of authors kept everyone engaged as they told November workshop attendees how they became published non-fiction authors. From divergent fields, each had a story of failure and success, with the emphasis on what made their work a success. Rebecca talked of her work with beginning writers and how she helped them organize their work into a publishable book. Linda spoke of working with major education publishers and the many types of writing that go into such pieces. Virginia spoke of her four beadwork books, their editing and illustration, and the need to work within the requirements of the publisher for success.

FREE U. of Iowa Online Workshop

Hidden Meanings: Creative Fiction, Non-Fiction & Facts

This course will be given as a MOOC (Massive Open Online Course) FREE of charge and can be taken on your own schedule 15 November - 31 December, 2019.

In November 2019, the world will commemorate the 30th anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall. At the same time, there is a continually growing global spread of misinformation and disinformation campaigns. This course takes a creative fiction and non-fiction approach to understanding and recognizing information, misinformation, and disinformation.

You as participants will work with iconic pieces such as The War of the Worlds by H. G. Wells and Tlön, Uqbar, Orbis Tertius by Jorge Luis Borges as well as more recent fiction and non-fiction texts, technically exploring how elements of information are used, and experimenting with these elements in your own creative fiction and non-fiction responses, contributing to the identification and strengthening of the roles of mythbusters, debunkers, and individuals in countering disinformation.

Register Here:

<https://iowa.novoed.com/#!/courses/hidden-meanings/flyer>

Of course you can also access the past MOOC course materials here: <http://www.distance-learningiwp.org/>

No experience is necessary. These online courses are open to all writers at all levels and open to anyone, anywhere in the world.

And the course is entirely free!

WCWF Wrap-Up

Report from the Board

The board met on Nov. 14 with Virginia Jensen, Caleb Ferganchick, Linda Skinner and Jane Miller attending.

Assessment of the November 7 poetry slam was positive with some with some exceptions for the lighting and sound. Overall the venue was successful and the event went very well.

Plans for 2020 are slowly emerging as new board members give their input. Members are invited to make suggestions for topics and events for next year.

The board welcomes Sunny Rawlins as a member of our team.

The December 12, 3:30, at CFI board meeting is open. Feel free to attend.

The Board needs new members. Get everything WCWF charges FREE if you join.
